Portable RedNotebook 1.1.4 Free

Mobile and web-friendly scheduling manager, with a few pros: • Schedule items (daily, weekly, monthly) - sync across many platforms! • iOS and Android apps! • Free and reliable • Automatic Forget about painful deadline-tracking. With RedNotebook, you can move your data to your desktop, into other types of files, and print out PDFs, as well as export your schedule and in-task event data into the LaTeX or a variety of other formats. This works for events, appointments, tasks, etc. If you need to list a bunch of reminders, or control a bunch of journal pages, you can do that too. Basically, RedNotebook is a mobile version of a desktop calendar, and the best part is that you can sync everything across your apps and platforms. • Sync across many platforms • iOS and Android apps • Free • Reliable • Automatic What makes this program work well is that it's portable. It's designed to sync data to your desktop, as well as to other formats, and it doesn't depend on an internet connection. Simply import your data from your desktop, and you can start writing your notes and schedule right away. • Import events, tasks, tasks and journals from any platform • iOS and Android apps • Free • Reliable • Automatic • A few downsides: • No user interface customization • No password protection • Importing your data and opening it is a 2-step process • There's no UI. You can make your own task/journal pages, but there's no way to do that. RedNotebook's strengths: • It's free • Open-source (MIT License) • Sync to the desktop or other files • Support for many platforms • iPad-friendly • Sync Android apps • Sync web apps • User-friendly • Can make journals and schedules • WYSIWYG • Prints tasks and journal pages • Allows you to add new fields or add tasks and journals to any new occurrence of the same type • Can change format, resize, etc. • Supports many platforms (Windows, OS X, Linux, iOS, Android) • Reliable • Automatic • Easy to use • Also works well with professional options like Asana, CalDAV, Google Tasks, and Toodledo • Password protected • Built on the Y
